PARENT FEEDBACK

"Tzvi woke up at 7am and first thing he said was, "I want to go to school already for matnas Shabbos!" Had to share!"

Mrs. Silber

"This Tuesday, when one of the buses was late for picking up, a few talmidim from the Yeshiva Ketana made their way into the Mesivta beis medrash to chazer their mishnayos while waiting for a ride to take them home. It was a pleasure to see such ahavas haTorah from our talmidim!"

Your Child Lied – Mazel Tov!

וַתִּכְחַשׁ שָׂרָה | לאמר לא צחקתי כי | וַיֵּרָא וַיֹּאמֶר | לא כי צחקתי:

Sarah lied, saying, “I did not laugh,” for she was frightened. But He replied, “You did laugh.”

R. Simon said: When the time came for the Holy Blessed One to make the first human being, The Ministering Angels made themselves into competing counsels, with one group opposing the other. Some of them said, “Don’t create humans,” and the others said “Create them.” So it is written: (Ps. 85:11) “Kindness and Truth met against one another, Righteousness and Peace faced each other.” The angel of Kindness said, “Create them, for they will do acts of loving kindness.” Then the angel of Truth said, “Do not create them, for they will be full of lies.” The angel of Righteousness said, “Create them, for they will establish justice.” The angel of Peace said, “Do not create them, for they will be in constant strife!” What did the Holy Blessed one do, but grab up Truth and hurl it to the earth, so it is written: (Daniel 8:12) “You hurled Truth to the earth.” Whereupon the Ministering Angels said before the Holy Blessed One, “Ruler of all worlds, what have You done? Why have You so chastised the chief of your court? Let Truth arise again from the earth.” So it is written, (Ps. 85:12) “Truth springs up from the earth.”

- Bereishis Rabbah 8:5

Is Your Child Lying to You? That’s Good

-Alex Stone, The New York Times, January 5, 2018

Lying and deception play a significant role in the unfolding stories of Sefer Bereishis. Sometimes those lies are for self-preservation, such as Avrohom and Yitzchok passing their wives off as sisters in dangerous areas. Other lies are for personal gain, such as Yaakov’s deception of his father in order to acquire the brachos, or the midrashic account of Esav deceiving his father with his pious questions about ma’aser of salt and straw. And, some of the lies are to save face in light of misdeeds, such as the brothers’ egregious deception of Yaakov after the sale of Yosef, or more benignly, Sarah’s denial of her laughter in this week’s parsha. There are also lies that are considered good and proper, and become the model for when it is OK to engage in deception, such as Hashem’s half-truth in reporting Sarah’s laughter to Avrohom in order to preserve shalom bayis.

With limited exceptions, lying is generally considered a moral shortcoming and is something we try to raise our kids to not do. Parents are therefore frequently horrified when their young child is caught in a lie, and they often overreact.

Children do not have a very strong built-in moral compass. They are born with the instinct to do what is in their best self-interest. Our job is to raise them and educate them with the values and morals that will act as the checks and balances on their self-interest motivation. Lying is simply one way children find to protect their interests, and they need to be taught that it is morally repugnant. But, before you teach your child that he should not lie, first celebrate the fact that he can.

Very young children have a limited view of the world. They cannot grasp that you do not see things as they see them. A young child will cover his eyes and genuinely believe that you cannot see him because he cannot see you. Likewise, a child may look at an object that is visible to him but clearly hidden from your field of view and not begin to realize that you can’t see it, since he can.

Very young children do not possess a concept of self as different and distinct from others. The attainment of that self-concept is an important stage in childhood cognitive development, and the ability to lie is evidence that the child has reached that stage. When the child believes that you see all that he or she sees and know all that he or she knows, there is no place for a lie. Only when they mature cognitively and learn to distinguish between them and others are children capable of lying. The lack of development of an ability to lie is often an indicator of a social-cognitive delay or disorder in a child. In fact, according to an article in the January 5, 2018 New York Times, the development of the ability to lie in young children is a sign of intelligence and is associated with higher IQ scores.

That same article describes what to do and not to do to get children to be truthful. Not surprisingly, punishment for lying has little effect on stopping children from doing so. Numerous studies indicate that punishment simply teaches children to be more clever about not being caught. Fairy tales that speak of the harm that can come from lying (The Boy Who Cried Wolf) also have no noticeable effect on discouraging lying.

So, what does work? Praising and rewarding children for truth-telling, pointing out and speaking highly of others who tell the truth in difficult situations, and asking the child to promise that he will tell the truth have all, in clinical psychological studies of children, been shown to work. Stories that speak to the value of truth telling, such as the fairy tale of George Washington and the cherry tree (yes, it is a fairy tale with no basis in fact) also help.

What does that mean for us as parents? When your child lies, don’t panic. It means he or she is developing normally. Don’t punish or scold the child for doing so. Instead, grab hold of the valuable, teachable moment and extol the virtues and values of truth telling. Your child is normal and healthy. Now you can begin the work of teaching him morality. Mazel Tov!
