Choir in practice ... gearing up for the Yeshiva's Annual Dinner this Sunday!

Rabbi Prupas's 7th grade talmidim learning outside enjoying the beautiful weather!

YKOR 2021 raffle campaign update:

We are happy to report that most of the talmidim have already received their individual prizes from this year's raffle campaign. The remainder of the prizes will be distributed in the coming days and weeks as they become available. We will be drawing the YKOR raffle campaign ticket winners at this year's Yeshiva dinner, this Sunday, May 9th. We will be drawing two winners in each of the three prize categories for 2020 and 2021. Third place prize is a $250 gift certificate to Tuvia's seforim & Judaica. Second place prize is a $500 gift certificate to Evergreen. The first place prize is $1000.00! Again, we will be drawing two winners in each of these categories at the dinner this Sunday. Please stay tuned next week in the Reuven review for the announcement of the raffle campaign winners! Special thank you to Mrs. Green and Mrs. Felberbaum for the outstanding job they did ordering the prizes and making the campaign a success!

Family Ties

שבתם איש אל אחוזתו ואיש אל משפחתו תשובו

פשטא דקרא דמורה לנו התועליות, שאז כאשר ישובו איש אל אחוזתו, הרי הפיזור בין חיי המשפחה בא ממסבות הזמן, אשר מרחק אחים זה פונה לצפון וזה לדרום לבקש טרפו ומזונו, אמנם אם ישובו איש אל אחוזתו, ישובו בתי האבות לדור במקום הורישם אבותם ויתלקטו אנשי המשפחה, אשר מכרו אחוזתיהם ונתרחקו זה מזה.

-Meshech Chochma

Family is not an important thing. It's everything.

-Michael J. Fox

What might you be willing to do to give your children the best possible shot at success in life? How much would you be willing to pay for a formula that has been proven effective time and time again at instilling in children self-confidence, self-esteem and the courage to take on life's challenges. What would you give to provide your child with the best path to happiness? As you've probably guessed already, the secret sauce won't cost you a penny. Instead it will cost you a little patience, a willingness to forego and forgive perceived slights, and a readiness to invest some of your time.

The conclusion of many studies is very clear. Children who grow up in strong families are primed for success in all critical areas of life. Families with strong family bonds provide children a sense of security, a feeling of belonging, and the confidence to take on the world.

Psychologist Mary Ainsworth is the progenitor of attachment theory. Ainsworth had the opportunity to observe children in a hospital setting in which she was working, and she noted differences in children's comfort and confidence when leaving the protective comfort of their primary caregivers. Based on her observations, Ainsworth designed an experiment called The Strange Situation in which she observed various children interacting with strangers with and without their mothers there.

Some children were extremely distressed at being without their caregiver and could not be consoled. They refused to interact with the environment in which they were placed, too timid, frightened, and intimidated to take the chance. Others were indifferent to being separated from their primary caregiver, but also indifferent to their environment, seemingly not curious to explore and discover what was around them.

The third group of children were apprehensive at first when they were on their own away from their caregiver, but soon adjusted and began to comfortably explore their environment and the person whom they were with. Ainsworth concluded that each of the children displayed a different level of attachment to their primary caregiver. The first group she labeled as anxious avoidant insecurely attached, so attached to the mother that they could not adjust without her. The second group displayed the opposite characteristics, insecurely avoidant, seemingly uninterested in the caregiver or in the environment around them.

That final group, the one that was tentative but warmed quickly, Ainsworth labeled as securely attached, displaying just the right degree of attachment to the mother to feel somewhat anxious on separation but to also be able to quickly recover and branch out. A child who is securely attached will be capable of exploring the world around him, knowing that he will always be able to come back to his caregiver for comfort and support when needed.

Ainsworth's observations about mothers and children are true for families as a whole. A child who feels secure in his family and will have the comfort of returning each night to a secure, comfortable home and family setting will have the confidence to engage the world he goes out to.

The Meshech Chochma sees the value of family connection contained in the halacha of the return of lands at yovel. As he explains, people move away over time, and families drift apart as they traverse the world in search of sustenance. When the reset button is pressed every fifty years and all return to their familial lands, families are brought back together. As the possuk states, each man will return to the land of his heritage, and by doing so he will return to his family as well.

The Torah emphasizes family bonds as an essential element for society to function and succeed. A society of healthy, well-adjusted adults will result from a society of healthy, well-adjusted families. Fostering family ties, recognizes that a healthy family is important for your child's well-being and growth. Take the time to bond as a family. Make sitting down together for meals a priority to be done whenever possible, and always remember that the value of keeping a family connected is more important than the issues that sometimes tear them apart. Your children will do better if you do.

Good Shabbos,
Rabbi Yisroel Gottlieb

The Peak Program is a summer program designed to improve social skills and compliant behavior. We are located within Camp Chevre and we participate in all camp activities and trips. Using evidence-based tools and a rigorous point system, boys learn to reshape their behaviors and enhance their peer relationships. We are in constant contact with parents before, during, and after the summer to help parents carry over improved behaviors at home, as well to assist their child in preparing for the upcoming school year.

Back for our 2nd Year! | Highly Trained Staff

What is the Peak Program?

We are an inclusionary summer experience hosted by a Monsey day camp. The program is for boys ages 6-11, focusing on improvement in behavior and social skills. This is done with a data - proven behavior modification point system.

Is my child right for the Peak Program?

If your child struggles with:

Compliance

Rule Following

Frustration Tolerance

Problem Solving

Self Esteem

Staying On Task

Impulse Control

he will benefit from the Peak Program

What parents are saying

"The School can't believe the improvement Y has made since last year. He doesn't show any defiant behaviors in school and brings friends home all the time."

Reaching New Heights

How does an inclusionary camp work?

The Peak Program is hosted by a large camp with a variety of activities, creating the maximum opportunities for mainstream integration. We participate in many of the daily activities and trips of our host camp, including swimming, sports, arts and crafts, carnivals, water activities, color war, concerts, and more.

The Peak Program utilizes a point system for behavior modification that is in place for every activity throughout the day, offering measurable results for the campers, staff, and parents.

Our campers participate in daily discussion groups to improve social skills, as well as daily practice through activities with staff coaching. The Peak Program also focuses on sports training, helping our campers to integrate successfully as they build confidence through the athletic skills they gain.

Who is our staff?

Our professional staff includes clinicians and educators with many years of experience in successful implementation of behavior modification. We have a low staff to camper ratio, so our staff members can devote their full attention to each child's needs.

How can the Peak Program carry success to home and school?

The Peak Program meets with each child's parents before, during, and after the summer to explain the system we employ, behaviors we are looking to improve in your son, and the plan of action in place. We help parents identify reinforcement patterns at home, and discuss positive changes to implement, allowing them to gain control over problematic behaviors.

Our staff is constantly in contact with parents, evaluating progress and adapting strategies as necessary. At the end of the summer, we collaborate with school personnel to carry over effective changes and set your child up for a successful school year.

We offer year-round Sunday programming to enhance the skills gained during the summer and help with continued behavioral success. This also allows the opportunity to maintain friendships created during the summer.
