וישלח Soft Children

וַיֹּאמֶר אֵלָיו אֲדֹנָי יָדַע כִּי הַיְלָדִים רַכִּים וְהִצְאָן וְהַבִּקָּר עֲלוֹת עָלַי וְדַפְקִים יוֹם אֶחָד נָמְתּוּ כָּל הַצֹּאן:

But he said to him, “My lord knows that the children are frail and that the flocks and herds, which are nursing, are a care to me; if they are driven hard a single day, all the flocks will die.

לִי לַעֲצָמִי אֵינִי חֹשֵׁשׁ אֲבָל הַיְלָדִים אִם יֵלְכוּ בִּיחָד וַיִּמָּצְאוּ בַחֲבֵרְתּוֹ שֶׁל עֲשׂו יִכּוֹל הַדָּבָר לַהֲבִיאֵם בְּנֶקֶל לַיָּדִי קִלְקֵלָה

Me, for myself I am not concerned, but the children if they go together and are found in the company of Esav, that could easily bring them to ruin

-Rav Yehoshua Rokeach of Belz

Children are like wet cement. Whatever falls on them makes an impression.

-Haim Ginott

Yaakov and Esav have reconciled, at least for the time. After thirty-four years of separation, the climactic reunion results in a tenuous peace between Yaakov and his brother, Esav. Esav proposes not only peace, but peaceful cooperation, “let us travel together.” Yaakov rejects the proposal, opting instead to remain on his own.

On the surface, Yaakov’s rejection is pragmatic. “I, with my young children, flocks, and herds cannot possibly keep pace with you.” But, there is clearly a deeper reason for Yaakov’s resistance to an alliance with Esav. The Belzer Rebbe sees that underlying reason in Yaakov’s own words.

“The children are soft,” Yaakov tells Esav. Soft, in physical strength, but also soft in moral strength. They are yet young, impressionable, and vulnerable to the negative influences that would invariably accompany an alliance with Esav. “As for me,” the Belzer Rebbe hears Yaakov saying, “I am OK, but I am concerned about having Esav around my impressionable, young children.”

Yaakov’s objection to allying with Esav is a simple, but important insight into the difference between the level of exposure that may be fine for adults, but not OK for children. It is a simple, obvious point, but one that requires consistent awareness and vigilance.

Yaakov knows that he is a fully formed adult, unimpressed by and uninterested in Esav’s antics. Likely, he would not even take note of the actions of Esav and his people, for their shenanigans have become little more than background noise. But, Yaakov recognizes that his kids are far from fully formed. They are highly impressionable, especially malleable, and are likely to be drawn, wide-eyed to the edge and excitement of Esav and his people. The greatness in Yaakov here lies in his ability to see the world through the lens of his young children rather than through his own, adult point of view.

That is, perhaps, the single greatest challenge for parents. We are capable of engaging the broader world without being unduly influenced by it. That engagement may come in the form of the places we visit or the things we invite into our home through the myriad media outlets that permeate our lives. Much of it has become background noise to us, and we may not even take notice of things inappropriate and antithetical to our values.

But, what to us is a non-entity may be a great source of temptation and excitement for our young children, who are “still soft.” They are too young to have built up immunity to the corrupting forces the broader culture may throw their way. That demands of us, as parents, a greater vigilance when deciding where it is appropriate to bring our children, and what it is appropriate to expose them to in their impressionable years.

Yaakov knew that his children were like wet cement. He recognized that time spent in the company of Esav and his cohorts in their childhood could leave them with a lifelong impression. “The children are soft,” he told Esav. They are too malleable and impressionable to hang around with you and your type.

Our children are soft and impressionable too.

Principal*
